Where Nonprofits and Foundations Turn for Minnesota Grantmaking Insights

As our communities face challenges – and opportunities – unlike any experienced for decades, it is crucial that grantmakers and nonprofits join forces.

Publications of the Minnesota Council on Foundations (MCF) are the sought-after sources that nonprofits, foundations and corporate grantmakers turn to for perspectives, news and research on charitable giving in Minnesota.

MCF is a regional association of grantmakers whose members give $900 million in grants annually, about three-quarters of all grantmaking in Minnesota. Members include family and private independent foundations, community and other public foundations, and corporate foundations and giving programs. Established in 1969, MCF is nationally recognized for its work to actively strengthen and expand philanthropy.

MCF's grantmaker connections fuel the content of our publications, providing timely, relevant, insightful and useful news valued by nonprofits and grantmakers.

Giving Forum

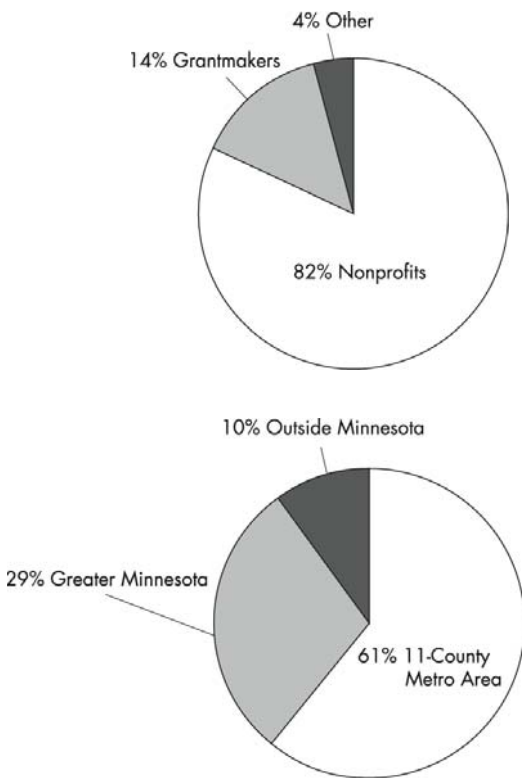

Giving Forum is a unique source of information on a topic essential to nonprofits: grantmaking. Published quarterly, Giving Forum features original in-depth articles that explore current giving issues, perspectives of Minnesota funders, and research conducted by MCF.

Popular sections in each issue include: online resources, funding trends, staffing changes, professional development opportunities for nonprofits, recent grant awards, and grantmaking news.

Wide Readership

Giving Forum's 16,500 recipients include managers and staff of a wide range of nonprofits, including education, youth, health and human services, public policy, arts and culture, the environment, international affairs and religious organizations; all leaders and staff of Minnesota's top foundations and corporate giving programs; nonprofit sector consultants; government officials; and other community leaders.

Public Policy and Philanthropy: Many Roads Lead to the Same Destination – Change

BY CHRISTINE MICHALSKI NOLAN

In its most common usage, the word "foundation" is equated with nonprofits, firm structures. There's a reason, after all, why business leaders use the term. While we don't want these structural foundations to cause changes and shifts over time, that is exactly what we expect of our philanthropic foundations.

As these foundations strive to analyze and sustain systems change, they are doing more than writing checks. Public policy engagement is the new buzz for pursuing mission with unprecedented impact.

Public Policy is Essential to Foundation Impact

"Whether you're a small founder like us, or a very large foundation, we all need skills in public policy in order to achieve really significant lasting social change" – John Laxson, John Laxson Foundation

"Ultimately, the work of our foundation is about creating real systems change, and that can only happen when we start talking to government," says John Laxson, trustee and administrator of the John Laxson Foundation. "Whether you're a small family foundation like us, or a very large foundation, we all need skills in public policy in order to achieve really significant lasting social change."

The John Laxson Foundation, Indian Land Equestrian Foundation, the Minneapolis Foundation, Southern Minnesota Initiative Foundation and Women's Foundation of Minnesota are several MCF members that have each chosen distinct strategies to impact public decision making. Their work – launching social entrepreneurship, funding advocacy organizations, establishing leader coalitions, sharing expertise and research with government officials, shaping public school curricula, writing and testifying at legislative hearings, bringing together diverse perspectives for dialogue, identifying existing laws that hinder a foundation's pursuit of mission – clearly demonstrates the ways that lobbying in the public sector can influence public decision making and advance for causes.

Look Beyond Lobbying and Find Strategies that Fit Your Organization

Lobbying is narrowly defined under federal law as an attempt to influence specific legislation by organizations directly with legislators and government officials. Although it is the most recognized public policy engagement tactic, lobbying is only one of 19 distinct policy strategies that Julia Coffman outlines in "A User's Guide to Advocacy Evaluation Planning," published by the Harvard Family Research Project. (See sidebar.) An organization can engage anywhere along this continuum, pursuing those activities that fit its capacity, culture, commitment and comfort level. Many foundations choose a combination of

Framework of Public Policy Activities

Direct Outreach/ Social Media	Using email, websites, blogs, podcasts, self phrases, Facebook or Twitter to reach a large audience
Formal Media	Pushing for media coverage through advertisements and "open letters"
Public Media	Getting a media company to promote a cause
Coalition and Network Building	Uniting advocacy voices by bringing together individuals, groups or organizations
Grassroots Organizing and Mobilization	Building a grassroots of support for an issue, often by helping people advocate on their own behalf
Studies and Metrics	Gathering a group of people for symbolic events that raise attention and visibility
Vote Education	Conveying an issue to voters in advance of an election
Ballot/ Proposition	Making an advocacy case in person through one-on-one or group meetings
Public Service Announcements	Placing a noncommercial advertisement to promote a social cause
Polling	Surveying the public to collect data for use in advocacy messages
Democratization Projects or Plans	Implementing a policy proposal on a small scale to show how it can work
Issue/Policy Analysis and Research	Systematically investigating an issue to define it or identify solutions
Policy Proposal Development	Developing a specific policy solution for an issue or problem
Legislation and Candidate Education	Helping politicians and candidates understand an issue and its broad or long-term impact
Relationship Building with Decision Makers	Interacting with those who have the authority to put change in motion
Legislative	Using the legislative system to raise policy by filing bills and testifying
Lobbying	Attempting to influence legislation by communicating with legislators or government members, employees or officials who help with legislation strategies, leveraging their resources to raise awareness of where the public needs an particular issue, bringing together diverse groups of issue or expertise and their collaborators, improving community members to advocate on their own behalf by providing technical assistance, increasing the capacity of nonprofits to mobilize others, identifying messages that resonate with policymakers and the public, determining what would happen if the status quo was allowed to prevail, aggregating what is known already about an issue and putting that to work to further disseminate, or identifying possible solutions and best practices.

Family Philanthropy: Deepening Connections, Building Legacies, Strengthening Shared Values

BY CHRISTINE MICHALSKI NOLAN

The classic saying, "You can choose your friends, but you can't choose your family," sometimes comes to negative attention. But, families engaged together in philanthropy often see the opposite. Because they are family, their collective commitment to making a difference is not only positive – albeit challenging – experience, but it yields impact that strongly endures. Family assets, traditions and values are in deeper and more enduring than giving individually.

Family philanthropy usually starts with one or two relatives intentionally choosing to do more with their assets that truly enrich their own family. They then seek the help and involvement of those who are closest to them, who best understand the family, and who have the biggest stake in ensuring their interests are carried out.

Here in Minnesota, family members and staff from the Carlson Foundation, the George Family Foundation, the Ericsson Foundation, the Marbrook Foundation, The Jay and Rose Phillips Family Foundation, and the Paul and Linda Amundson Foundation are giving together to enhance their relationships beyond the everyday details of family life. It helps them clarify what they value, envision their place in the broader community, and extend their ability to create positive, lasting change beyond the branches of the family tree and out into the wider world.

Writing Checks Was Just the Beginning: The George Family Foundation

With two grandfathers who were ministers, Penny George grew up understanding the importance of giving to others. As her husband, Bill, continued to do the same in 1992, the beginning, Penny George, the foundation's president, says their checks without giving much thought to what the impact would or could be. "It wasn't until I got most cancer in 1995 and we started working with professional advisers, that we started to think more intentionally. If we could do anything and be successful, what would we want to accomplish?"

"At the same time," adds Jackie Ocker, the foundation's executive director, "we're given and the responsibility became greater. The Georges would have just written big checks to their favorite charities, but the reality of what they had to give away led them to look strategically at addressing community needs. Otherwise, we don't realize what these needs are and we really dig in."

As the foundation transformed, so did George's self-image. "I never would have

Extraordinary Growth of Family Foundations

Family foundations are private foundations in which the original donor or the donor's family members have a substantial role in governance. Here is a snapshot of the field nationally, as reported in "Key Facts on Family Foundations," published by the Foundation Center in April 2010.

- More than 38,000 governing family foundations existed in the U.S. in 2008.
- Of those, 28 percent were created since 2002, 42 percent in the 1990s, 13 percent in the 1970s, and 17 percent in the 1950s and earlier.
- Between 2007 and 2008, giving by U.S. family foundations rose 14.4 percent, compared to a 3.4 percent increase for foundations and public charities.
- Giving by U.S. family foundations in 2008 totalled $11.1 billion.
- Only four percent of U.S. family foundations reported less than $1 million in assets in 2008.
- The largest family foundation in Minnesota was The McLaughlin Foundation, which totalled 1.8 billion in total family foundation giving in 2008, according to 992 U.S. family foundations.

See "Giving Trends" on Page 3 for data on Minnesota family foundations.

applied the word 'philanthropic' to myself when we began," she reflects. "I was giving money away, but now we're really thinking about what we want to change in society and doing our best to steward resources for the common good."

In 2008, the George Family Foundation granted nearly $2.6 million. Its primary interest areas are: cognitive health and healing, leadership, spirituality and community.

"We didn't move away from our traditional five pillars of support – arts, education, environment, service and body mind spirit," she continues. "But in 2009, we began to look at organizations, both familiar and new to us, through a new lens. How does each program or proposal help create equal opportunities for local immigrant and refugee communities?"

Recalibrating to Address Today's Greatest Needs: The Marbrook Foundation

After 26 years led by Carolyn Branda Jr., the Marbrook Foundation used its leadership transition not only to educate a new generation of family members on how the foundation operates, but also to examine if its programming was as effective as it could be.

"We're a relatively small foundation," notes Julie Zella, chair of the board of trustees, "so we need to get the biggest bang for our buck." The trustees spent months asking Trustee Chair leaders about current and future community needs. "We kept hearing the same thing: The face of the Twin Cities is changing, the number of immigrants and refugees is increasing, and schools, social services and other areas are not equipped," Zella explains. "This national handbook really defined our new focus."

"We didn't move away from our traditional five pillars of support – arts, education, environment, service and body mind spirit," she continues. "But in 2009, we began to look at organizations, both familiar and new to us, through a new lens. Giving Forum 2011 Editorial Calendar

Winter 2011: Disparities in Minnesota: Philanthropy's Role in Closing the Gaps

Minnesota enters the second decade of the 21st century in the midst of wide-ranging and deep challenges in education, employment, housing, the environment and health. And these only scratch the surface. All of us – from our new governor and the legislature to the nonprofit and private sectors – are facing painfully tough choices. What does philanthropy bring to the table? What is the role of grantmakers in shaping solutions to the mounting disparities in our state?

This issue of Giving Forum will highlight how Minnesota funders are drawing on their resources, creativity and boldness to help resolve these daunting issues. Also featured will be MCF's just-released research on grantmakers' 2011 outlook, examining how they anticipate their giving and other activities will be affected by the slow economic turn-around and the challenging nonprofit landscape.

Spring 2011: Diversity and Inclusion in Philanthropy

Above all, grantmakers want to be effective. Striving for and – more importantly – achieving diversity and inclusion in philanthropy has been heralded nationally and locally as key to more effective grantmaking. But what does this mean, and what does it look like?

This issue of Giving Forum will feature MCF's highly anticipated five-year research study "Working Toward Diversity and Inclusion" and focus on perceptions, realities and best practices of Minnesota grantmakers. Research findings and grantmaker interviews will reveal where the sector has been, is now and wants to be, and how grantmakers envision reaching their and the community's goals.

The issue also will highlight insights from grantmakers who model inclusive practices and have had real success in actively leveraging diversity and inclusion to build strong organizations and ultimately achieve better outcomes in the community.

Summer 2011: Impactful Giving and Getting: How To's for Grantmakers and Grantseekers

Giving away money is easy – NOT! Determining values, establishing effective processes, and making strategic, impactful grantmaking decisions are extremely challenging. And as resources become increasingly tighter while societal needs grow, grantmaking absolutely needs to more effective, more efficient and more intentional.

This issue of Giving Forum will examine all the nuts and bolts of effective grantmaking. From establishing clear, meaningful grant guidelines to adopting new mission-related investment tools that capitalize on the other 95 percent of their assets, grantmakers need to reassess every method to maximize outcomes. The issue also will feature strategies that funders and nonprofits can engage in together to expand the reach of grant dollars. Readers will find answers to nonprofits' most-pressing questions, access first-person accounts from program officers and other funding decision makers, and look behind-the-scenes at Minnesota grantmaking.

Fall 2010: Private Independent Foundations: Grantmaking Movers and Shakers

Of the nearly 1,500 foundations in Minnesota, about 85 percent are private family and independent foundations. Of these, most are family grantmakers – organizations in which the original donor or donor's family is still involved. So the number of private independent foundations is small, but their philanthropic impact is huge.

The largest foundation in Minnesota is now the newly formed Margaret A. Cargill Foundation, a private independent foundation with assets exceeding $1.9 billion. Other notable independent grantmakers are the Bush, Otto Bremer, Northwest Area, Blandin, F.R. Bigelow, Jerome and Hardenbergh foundations, which are all among the largest Minnesota grantmakers ranked by assets. The W.K. Kellogg and John S. and James L. Knight foundations, also MCF members, are examples of private national foundations.

This issue of Giving Forum will delve into what inspired the creation of these and other private foundations, how their missions are relevant today, the recent impact of their work, the legacy they hope to create, and what differentiates them from other grantmakers.

Corporate Philanthropy: Unwavering Commitment and Focused Strategies in Stormy Times

BY CHRISTINE MURAKAMI NOONAN

John D. Rockefeller III, writer Joe Nocera in The New York Times (Dec. 22, 2007), once referred to the Minneapolis-St. Paul area as the "Financial City," noting that the public spirit of the business community made him feel "a bit like Dorothy in the Land of Oz. I had to come (here) myself to see if it really exists."

For decades, if not generations, we in Minnesota have taken great pride in the philanthropic spirit demonstrated by the corporate sector. A snapshot of corporate giving statistics shown on this page illustrates why. Corporate grantmakers are major players in supporting all aspects of community betterment by first supporting the work of nonprofit organizations.

As we tinker on the brink of economic crisis, we're all holding our breath, knowing that how the corporate philanthropic community responds will have long-lasting ramifications.

National Corporate Giving News is Unsettling

In February 2009, The Conference Board, a national nonprofit that researches management and marketplace-related issues, surveyed 158 companies on planned changes to their corporate giving programs. The results are worrisome:

- 41 percent said they had already reduced how much they plan to donate in 2009.
- 35 percent will make fewer grants this year, with an additional 22 percent considering doing so.
- 48 percent have decided to make or are considering making smaller grants.

Snapshot of Corporate Giving in Minnesota

- $482 million: Cash grants given by Minnesota corporate grantmakers in 2008.
- 10.8% increase in corporate grant-making in Minnesota from 2007 to 2008.
- 120: Number of corporate grantmakers in the state.
- 9% share of grantmakers in the state who are nonprofits.
- 42% share of the $1.16 billion grant-maker dollars in Minnesota that come from corporate funders.
- 33% share of Minnesota corporate grant dollars that go to education.
- Top five states for corporate giving as a share of all giving by foundations in the state: Arkansas, Oregon, Minnesota, Alabama, Iowa, Georgia.
- The Foundation Center's Foundation Yearbook: Facts and Figures on Private and Community Foundations, 2008 Edition.
- Home of the Minnesota Keystone Program,¹ accompanying 227 companies that have committed to donating at least 2 percent of their profits every year to the community. (More: 85 percent of MCF corporate members are also members of the Keystone Program.)
- From MCF's Giving in Minnesota, 2008 Edition. For a full survey and more, visit mcf.org.

Minnesota Grantmakers Cautiously Hold Steady

Minnesota corporate grantmakers, though, are more optimistic. MCF conducted a survey in November 2008, and 39 corporate foundations and giving programs representing about 30 percent of annual grant dollars in Minnesota responded. The results, published in January in the MCF 2009 Statistical Report, show:

- 59 percent believe they will not make any changes in grants paid compared to 2008.
- 13 percent expect to increase their grantmaking.
- Of all grantmaker types, corporate foundations and giving programs anticipate the least amount of change in their giving levels in 2009.

As part of thoughtful, well-rounded philanthropic strategies, corporate giving means more than cash contributions. Through Delta Dental's in-kind product donations and oral health education efforts, the young boy received advanced prenatal dental care as part of the Smiles Across Minnesota initiative.

"As a corporate citizen, we have an obligation to help our communities thrive. Our main purpose is to create successful, sustainable businesses that provide good jobs. In so far as our business is healthy and allows us to do so, we will continue to serve our communities." — Alex Cirillo, vice president, 3M Foundation and Community Affairs

This spring, despite the almost daily barrage of disheartening economic reports, corporate funders in Minnesota maintain they are still hopeful, albeit cautious. 3M's corporate giving in 2008 totaled $48 million (up from $42.5 million the year prior). This included $26 million in cash and $22 million in in-kind donations. According to Alex Cirillo, vice president, 3M Foundation and Community Affairs, "At this point, we expect our cash donations in 2009 will be flat with '08. Our product donations vary from year to year depending on availability and need. We have a commitment of support from the company to the foundation for the first six months of the year. At our June board meeting, we'll look at the second half and decide if we need to make changes. I expect that the total members will be the same, but the internal mix could change." How? 3M may consider reallocating funds from long-term international environmental projects to meet short-term local health and human service needs in communities where 3M plants are facing tough times. CISI Foundation President William Nelson explains the strategy enabling his organization to hold funding levels steady: "Typically we receive the company's contribution to the foundation. But this year, we kept an extra cash on hand as we could in pay bills and keep giving."
